A Biblical Theology of Missions by George W. Peters

At the very heart of Peters' "biblical theology of missions" are the chapters on missionary theology and the Old and New Testaments. Dividing revelation into three rather arbitrary blocks—racial (Gen. 1-11), national (time of Israel), and ecclesiological (time of the New Testament church), Peters elucidates the missionary themes which are implicit in these divisions.

Direction: A Biblical Theology of Missions

Mission in the Old Testament is primarily centripetal in movement, being focused on God's national son (Israel), whom God calls to his worship in a world given over to idolatrous worship. After Genesis 1-11, the storyline of the Bible narrows in on a family and then a nation through which this promised son would come.
