Most Georgia species of reptiles and amphibians are harmless to humans, and even those that can cause injury do so only in self-defense. Alligator attacks occasionally occur in the southern portions of the state, mostly as a consequence of nuisance alligators that have been fed (illegally) by humans and therefore do not behave in their normally shy manner when a person is present.

Laura and I kept comparing this country to bordering Turkey but it was the complete opposite. Where Turkey is covered in trash, in Georgia you can see people collecting litter along the streets. It is a much cleaner country. Furthermore, well over 70 species of amphibians and reptiles that live in this country make it a herpers heaven.
