Architectonic Space is the most complete and coherent treatise on the nature, purpose and meaning of architecture that has so far been attempted. It is the product of its author's lifetime pursuit of an idea that has haunted him from childhood: a search for the archetypal basis of the act of building. Seeing architecture not merely as the expression, but as the precondition of human culture ...

Only by rooting Dom Hans van der Laan's work in its context and by linking it to its historiography, a more in-depth and critical understanding of Architectonic Space can be achieved. To unravel and demystify Architectonic Space, this research addresses two different research questions, resulting in two interwoven, dialectic parts.

Hans van der Laan - Wikipedia

The Dutch architect and monk, Dom Hans van der Laan (1904-1991) leaves us with a legacy of architectural writings and realisations arising from his search for fundamental principles of architecture.¹ His 1977 manifesto Architectonic Space aims to combine spatial philosophical concepts with practical design tools [1, 2].² The book is a series of Dom Hans van der Laan designed the building as a materialization and testing ground of his ideas put forward in his publications Architectonic Space (1970) and The Play of Forms (1985). Although the religious concepts behind his thoughts grew from his own Benedictine background, he developed an architectural philosophy that aimed to define spaces of worship through universal characteristics as dwelling and living.
