Hitomi Kanehara shot to fame in Japan with her debut novel, Snakes and Earrings, which won the prestigious Akutagawa prize while she was just 20 years old (she is, I suspect, a partial inspiration for Konoha Inoue in Mizuki Nomura's Book Girl series). That novel tells the tale of a delinquent young woman leading a hard-knock life on the streets of Tokyo.

I love Hitomi Kanehara and everything that she does is ripe with brilliance. Considering she wrote "Auto-Fiction" at around the age of 22, it's incredible to think of how deep this book really is. And knowing the author somewhat, she is a depressed soul and has had parts of her life that invariably seep into all her literary works.
