In 2017 the remnants of Tropical Storm Cindy rolled through the Midwest. The severe weather and howling winds had died down, but it was forecast to dump several inches of rain on Indiana and surrounding states. I had planned to visit a state park that day and since I was planning on ending up in the lake anyway, went ahead. It was an amazing day.

The winds start going crazy outside, and the rain is pouring down along with some quarter-size hail. We're basically looking at weather that goes to funnel clouds very easily. It happens very quickly; it is starting to rain when our customer walked in the door, we build his pizza from scratch, and it's in the oven.
