The Cracked Pot Trail was a pilgrim's pathway from the Gates of Nowhere in Reliant City to the Shrine of the Indifferent God in Farrog. The majority of the cobblestoned trail crossed the Great Dry, a large plateau of scrub grass and the occasional well or spring, and took around thirty-nine days to complete. The final stage of the trail, called the Great Descent, passed three hundred feet down a cliff to a vast river.

Earlier this year, Crack'd Pot Trail, a tale of Bauchelain and Korbal Broach, hit the shelves, offering a strangely compelling narrative concept in an over-embellished, long-winded package. Using the backdrop of the Bauchelain and Korbal Broach novellas, Crack'd Pot Trail follows the Nehemothanai and their artist/pilgrim companions as they continue their hunt of the infamous Bauchelain and Korbal Broach (a less-than-reputable pair, to say the least).

Crack'd Pot Trail : A Malazan Tale of Bauchelain and ...

A wide and varied group walks the Cracked Pot trail, an ancient road of pilgrimage through the desert of Seven Cities. Many among them are artists, aiming to win the (annual) competition to elect the century's best artist held on the other side of the desert, while others are pilgrims, hunters, knights or simply lost souls.
