Food companies and agencies are being held accountable by consumers and agencies for food fraud prevention, regardless of a traditional focus on public health risks. Beyond the potentially catastrophic economic impact of a recall or manufacturing shut-down, corporate officials are being held personally criminally liable for incidents.

FOOD FRAUD PREVENTION

Food fraud prevention requires a fundamentally different approach than for food safety since there is an intelligent adversary who actively seeks to avoid detection. Food fraud prevention has become a management requirement for food standards such as those organized by the Global Food Safety Initiative (GFSI) . GFSI was created in 2002 by a group of global
