This book attracted me because it deals with forests, especially in the Pacific Northwest, where I live, but it is relevant to other areas. Although the book came out in 1999, I am giving it a 5 rating because the botanical information - based on a lot of down-to-earth research (literally)- is still valid, and the issues of old-growth forests, logging, the economy and the environment, are ...

inside that forest and whether I could capture that feeling in a picture book. The name of this book came from a visit our family made to the Palace of Versailles near Paris (it was made into a royal palace by France's King Louis XIV in the late 1600s). There was a picture on the wall of the King's beloved dogs. One of them was named Florisette.

A reflective teacher is an effective teacher. And educators do tend to reflect on their teaching methods. In an article titled "Teacher Reflection In a Hall of Mirrors: Historical Influences and Political Reverberations," researcher Lynn Fendler states that teachers are reflective by nature as they continuously make adjustments in instruction.
