To set up a bass guitar, start by using the tuning pegs to loosen the old strings and pulling them out through the bridge or the body. Then, pull new strings that are the same thickness as the old strings through the bridge, and wrap them around the nuts while turning the tuner knobs to tighten them.

Ibanez guitar quality has sadly gone down since the year 2000. I can't stress enough how much more valuable it is to buy a used Ibanez instead of new. The prestige guitars are good, but anything non MIJ will be considered a mid level guitar or lower. I suggest you either get a good priced used MIJ Ibanez or save up for one. You will not be sorry.

These are the basics of a bass guitar setup. A good setup is not all about measurements. It's about the way your instrument sounds and plays and is a very personal thing that varies from one player to the next. But these are some good references to get you on the right track to dialing in the perfect bass setup for you.

The bow profile of your neck will ultimately dictate the kind of setup that works best for it. [Bow is the amount of relief or "frontbow" the neck is dialed into, bow profile describes where the relief is] Some necks will show bow only from the 7th to the nut, some will show a very long smooth even bow throughout the whole neck, and many other profiles.
