Bonded leather is formed from leather fibers which are affixed to another material, such as polyurethane. Bonded leather is not a traditional method of bookbinding, but it has become a standard practice to create the appearance of a leather binding cheaply. Varieties of leather bindings: Limp binding: Leather is often stretched over hard boards (either cardboard or wooden), but leather can also be left flexible, covering the front, back, and spine of the book. When extended over the fore ...
