Yes, they do, but not for the right reasons. Perfume is a genderless word much like fragrance, meaning it's for everyone. A fragrance is called a cologne or a perfume depending on the % of perfume oil in the composition. Colognes are generally the weakest at around 3-5% whereas perfumes (EDT and EDP) range from 10 - 20%.

The word Perfumery refers to the art of making perfumes. Perfume was further refined by the Romans, the Persians and the Arabs. Although perfume and perfumery also existed in East Asia, much of its fragrances were incense based. The basic ingredients and methods of making perfumes are described by Pliny the Elder in his Naturalis Historia.

History of perfume - Wikipedia

Mals86: A very thoughtful look at the groundbreaking and influential, Victoria! I look forward to reading the rest of the series. I have a small vintage bottle of L'Origan parfum; it is very rich and lovely. Appears to be 1950s from the packaging - it came in its original satin-lined leatherette box, with a little rubber stopper keeping the air out.

Myth #3: Perfume Lasts Forever. Just like your makeup, your perfume has an expiration date, and it's probably shorter than you think. If you've got some bottles of perfume lingering around from several years ago, it's time to clear them out. The scents have likely been compromised by now. Perfume has three worst enemies: light, heat, and ...

Perfume as we know it is a sweet smelling liquid made from natural and synthetic aromatic ingredients. Yet, far from being a mere scent, perfume is also a fashion accessory, tool of self-definition, and convenient gift. Perfumes are now branded so successfully that names and bottles are often more recognizable than actual smells.
