Integrity. First of all, the discussion of ethics as related to law enforcement must begin with a definition of the word integrity. One researcher has said that it is “the sum of the virtues required to bring about the general goals of protections and service to the public.”<sup>3</sup> He created a list of characteristics that he feels officers must possess to have integrity.

We often use words like ethics and values, but for all the talk of ethics in law enforcement, it's important to establish what ethics and ethical behavior are, and what they aren't. Such a strong push exists within the law enforcement community to uphold ethical standards, but without a clear definition of terms, such talk is futile.

A police force with integrity is one with little or no misconduct or corruption. In the past, most studies viewed the problem of misconduct as one of individual problem officers, the so-called bad apples on the force. More recent studies show that whites generally see misconduct as episodic and confined to individual officers, while blacks tend to see misconduct as a more entrenched aspect of ...
