No point in painting rubber rims when making a model of this tank. Often AFV's are painted in the field or in bad conditions and the rubber rims may well be painted the same colour as the hubs. As the rubber flexes, some of this paint may flake off but even so the rubber rim is likely to be mostly the same colour as the hub.

To my eye, the 1:350 scale model looks “right” when painted with the colors in this guide, but there’s no law to prevent modelers from adjusting the values of the colors to make the tones lighter or darker, as they desire. Just remember to keep their relative values, especially the shades of gray, the same.
