Few people have perfectly symmetrical faces, and asymmetry is not a cause for concern. Still, eye asymmetry is sometimes created by a medical condition. Learn about the causes and treatment options.

Asymmetrical Eyes: Causes and Treatment

Fluctuating asymmetry is the non-systematic variation of individual facial landmarks with respect to the facial midline, i.e., the line perpendicular to the line through the eyes, which crosses the tip of the nose and the chin. A wide variety of methods have been used to examine the claim that facial symmetry plays a role in judgments of beauty.
