By Maureen Shawn Kennedy, AJN editor-in-chief. When women marched in the street to gain the right to vote, nurses marched with them. It's no coincidence that nursing's push for a professional identity occurred parallel to the women's rights movement in the 19th and 20th centuries. As women were expanding their interests beyond the home and seeking a voice in the greater society, so too were nurses looking to establish their own professional identity and practice.
