Aldous Huxley wrote a 1954 book called "The Doors of Perception" that discussed his experiences with psychoactive agents; its title was an allusion to Blake's work. But QI has not located the quotation under investigation in the texts of Blake or Huxley.

The Doors of Perception

Doors of Perception is a deeply interesting short essay by the famous author Aldous Huxley. In 1953 he was involved in a controlled experiment into the psychological effects of the drug mescaline. What he describes is less a mere hallucinatory experience and more an opening of his ability to perceive, and to see himself as part of the Oneness of the universe.

The Doors of Perception Home

Huxley's "The Doors of Perception" is one of the most interesting books i've encountered. Obviously, its notable for its account of an experiment with the drug mescaline, found in peyote. The fundamental notion of the work is that the mind acts, in its most normal and evolved state, as a "reducing valve."
