The Systems View of Life: A Unified Vision is an attempt to integrate life's biological, cognitive, and social dimensions in a unified systems view of life. In a way, I think Capra and Luisi are brave in taking such a broad sweep across so many different areas. Even if you take a broad sweep, it will still be too narrow.

The Systems View of Life is an excellent survey of the history of science from a western perspective. It rightly criticizes the mechanistic view of the world that has dominated western society since the dawn of the industrial revolution, and it lays bare the damaging consequences of that mechanistic perspective on the world and the environment.
