In The Valley Of The Moon, Jack London shows the reader what he can do, and then doesn't do it. First part of the book is the most perceptive and best-written example I can remember of a love story told from the viewpoint of BOTH lovers, but then it dissolves into a treatise on agricultural practices.

THE VALLEY OF THE MOON by Jack London

Jack London's The Call of the Wild is an anthropomorphic canine's unforgettable tale of survival. Set during the 1890s Klondike Gold Rush, the novel's main character, Buck, a large and powerful St. Bernard-Scotch Shepherd, is stolen from his ranch home in Santa Clara Valley, California, and sold into service as a sled dog.

Ironically, after years of travel, they find their "Valley of the Moon" only miles north of Oakland. This is as close to a happy ending as one will find in a Jack London novel, that is, unless you know that in reality, Jack and Charmian's dream house was burned by an arsonist before it was completed, and that London died soon after writing "Valley of the Moon" at the age of only 41.
