I will keep this short. I plan to take my 40D to the beach and do not have a dedicated Canon flash as of yet. I have two Vivitar 285HV's and a Quantum battery pack. What advice could you spare if I utilize the 285HV off camera as far as manual with 1/4, 1/2 etc. on the multi meter?

I am considering switching to Canon equipment, either a 40D or 50D for now and want to know if I can (in manual mode) vary the power of the popup flash on either of these cameras. I downloaded the manuals for both and don't see any reference to manually setting the power of the popup flash.

I have the vivitar auto thyristor sms 30D from my old Pentax SLR film camera. It fits on the hotshoe of my 40D and probably my Rebel XT but I am not sure if I should use it? Aside from bouncing the flash can anyone tell me what the other benefits may be? I am also assuming I will save a tad on battery life not using the built in flash?

When I got my 40D, I was having flash questions. Everywhere I turned it said that older flash units might damage the electronics on the camera, because they fire at greater than 6v. It's the triggering voltage that is the problem. I have a Sunpak 444D and a Vivitar 285. You can get an inexpensive hotshoe adapter which limits the voltage.
